Maurice Rowdon : Philosopher

'Philosophy begins and ends with doubts about what is real. It finds that reality is simply a conviction, not what we can prove or demonstrate. Other animals have no difficulties of this kind---the movement of their wings and fins and legs and amphibious abilities require no forethought, being inherited.'

'Only one philosopher has squarely faced human dementia and that was Socrates. Indeed all the later philosophy, from Aristotle to Kant and Nietzsche, was a doomed effort to fairy-tale the dementia away. That fairy tale is best personified by the meaning of the word philosophy itself... 'the love of wisdom', in an animal which has consistently, through no fault of his own (indeed, he always demonstrated the greatest ardour) shown less of it than any other'.
