

Birds.

Their lives are as subtle
As the stars that turn
Without inner engines;
Listen to the rooks
Arguing loudly
While the blackbird sits
Alone on a tree
Like a spy;
And the great white flash
Of magpie-wings
As he flaps away;
Did magpie steal from their nest?
And is blackbird watching
Reflective, hidden,
Thinking to himself?